WHAT IF?! EP 15

THREE HUNDRED GUESTS, ONE PANEL OF AUNTS

The Grandma-Approved Wedding Menu

STARTERS

Soup of the Aunts

Served in three portions: too salty, not salty enough, and "I haven't tried it".

Grandma: "Add salt. Take salt away. Same pot."

The Chef's Tiny Plate with a Swoosh

One bite, one artistic streak of sauce. Guests may admire it from the buffet line.

Grandma: "Is that the sample? Where's the food?"

Crispy Potato Skins (hand peeled)

Peeled quietly by a man who used to be famous for shouting.

Grandma: "He missed a bit. Again."

APPROVED BY GRANDMA (final)

MAINS

Ten Kilos of Potatoes, Any Style

Mashed, roast, boiled, or "whatever he's finished peeling". Seconds are not optional.

Grandma: "Eat. You are too thin. Everyone is too thin."

Slow Roast Chicken, Family Recipe

Seasoned by feel and defended in court. Recipe lost to history, and to three cousins.

Grandma: "No measuring. If you need a spoon, you're not ready."

The Buffet Line Special

A queue to the parking lot, garnished with a relative filming it.

Grandma: "Move along. Your uncle is taking two."

DESSERTS

Grandma's Apple Pie

Ninety years of practice. No notes, no timer, no complaints that survive the first slice.

Grandma: "It's ready when I say it's ready."

Wedding Cake, Cut by Management

Slice sizes are not negotiable. The chef was asked to stand at the back.

Grandma: "Yes, you get a corner. No, not that corner."

Allergies? Ask Grandma. She will tell you what you are having. · No chefs were harmed. One was reassigned to potatoes.
